For Unit 1 some revisions that I would make would definitely be on my imaginary resume. Some revisions that I would make on my imaginary resume is that I would try to be a little more on the creative side, rather than making it seem so professional and realistic. Some other revisions that I would make in unit 1 is on my news examples. I would revise my news examples by explaining each article more. I personally feel like I didn't explain each article as well. Some ways in which I could've explained each article better is by including why each article was a specific type of article (analysis, facts, opinion) and some of the qualities they had that made them a specific article.

For Unit 3 some revisions that I would make in this unit would definitely be mainly on my natural science article. Some revisions that I would make on my natural science article is definitely including a keywords/vocabulary section, and including more details overall. Some sections I would focus most on if I were to revise this article would definitely be on the methods and discussion/conclusion. I would mainly focus on these areas because I still think my methods section is a little difficult to understand how exactly I am measuring my research question, and the importance of why I chose to do it that way. Also, I would focus more on the conclusion because I think I should've gotten a little more into depth on the importance of this research study and connected it to the real work right now. Something else I would include in my natural science article if I were to revise it would be pictures, graphs, and tables. I would include these to make the article look more presentable and professional.

For Unit 4 some revisions that I would make in this unit would be on my ethnography final draft. Even though I believe I tried my best in this article, I think there is still a lot of missing details and information that I should've included. Some revisions that I would make on my ethnography article would definitely be, including a keywords/vocabulary section after my abstract. I would also include more background information/details in my introduction paragraph because not everyone is familiar with the new YouTube norm, so it may be confusing for certain readers to understand the importance of my ethnography. I would also change the placement of my field notes, instead of having it in the middle of my ethnography I would make it the last page. Also, I would revise the tone and vocabulary choices that I used because I don't think that they qualify in the genre of ethnography.
